TIPS FOR HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

Decision Making and Planning

Figuring out what to do for work is a process that happens over time, rather than a single one-time decision. Career Planning is a developmental, thought-provoking process. You must examine yourself: your interests, your temperament, and your values. You then need to think about what you want in a job.

Establish Tentative Personal/Career Goals

Write them in terms of short range and long range objectives, with an emphasis on what you plan to do after high school. Remember, you must continue your education and training beyond high school in order to support the life style you want.

Discuss Your Career Goals with Counselors, Teachers, & Family

Ask their advice, and encourage their input so you can evaluate their suggestions and ideas along with your own.

Explore Occupations and Gather Career Information

Store your collection of materials, articles, and pamphlets in a loose leaf binder or scrapbook. Find out what education or additional training will be required to pursue the careers of your choice.

Conduct Informational Interviews

Talk with people who are working in occupations that interest you. Consider using a tape recorder to take notes. Ask your counselors or parents to assist you in arranging field trips to see various work environments.

Develop a Resume of Activities, Honors, and Achievements

This can be used later when you apply for part-time jobs and volunteer to work in community and civic activities.

Assemble a List of Admission Requirements and Qualifications

This list will assist you in determining how competitive you are. Two and four-year colleges, military organizations, and trade schools have entrance requirements. Collect college catalogs and other brochures. Ask about open house activities.

Visit Colleges or Other Education/Training Sites

Talk to professors and administrators, interview students, sit in on classes, tour facilities, read the bulletin boards and get copies of its newspapers. Develop a list of questions to be answered, and names, addresses and phone numbers of key contacts. Make sure that the institutions offer the type of education and/or training you will need to pursue your career choices. Inquire about the placement of their graduates.

IS SOCIAL MEDIA HURTING YOUR JOB SEARCH?

DON'T LET FACEBOOK BE THE REASON YOU DON'T GET A NEW JOB.

Odds are good you're involved with some form of social media. Maybe you spend your free time tweeting on Twitter or perhaps you prefer looking up old friends on Facebook. It's a great idea to be involved with social media and it may even help you with your job search networking – but beware. There are countless horror stories of people who lost their jobs or lost their chance at a job because of what they said when they thought no one was listening.

Here are some rules to follow to make sure that social media doesn't ruin your job search.

- ✓ Never trash talk your job or a potential job
- ✓ Never curse
- ✓ Never lie
- ✓ Make your accounts private
- ✓ Google yourself from time to time
- ✓ Remember, online privacy is an illusion

The Internet is forever. No matter how private you keep your settings, you always run the risk of a potential employer seeing something about you you'd rather have kept to yourself. What you consider a hilarious picture now may be embarrassing in five years. Not only that, but it could cost you a job. You want to put your best foot forward when trying to find a job, which means you'll need to manage your online reputation now.
